NOTES OF THE GAME.

During the practice preceding the game, while Clyde Engle was hitting, he clouted one to right field which was going at a mile a minute clip. The ball took one bounce and landed on Danny Moeller's left arm. Fortunately the fleet

That old 2 o'clock infield was on the job as usual, but one of its members was amone; the missing. Wally Smith covered short for Schnefer's team in place of Joe Gedeon, whose noisy re-marks always put pep in the work.

Several fans braved the jeers and libe of the army of rooters and turned out in straw lids. One perfectly good new straw hat was seen in the grand stand while an occupant of one of the boxes was gayly sporting a Panama head cov

Johnson served to Hooper, the first right fielder of the Red Sox, he clouted it to deep center. Mian after a swift sprint managed to come up with the ball. Harry sure hit it bard.

Dutch Schaefer was prancing around the third base line as usual, but had lit-tle chance to get up much enthusiasm. In the seventh when the Nationals ap-peared to have a chance to get a couple of runs, Schaef came out of the coach-er's position but was promptly chased by Umpire Egan.

In the seventh, after Foster had doubled, Milan skied to Hoper. Boston had only scored one run at this stage of the game and the Nationals heavy hitter, Gandil, was purposely walked. Morgan and Shanks, who followed, were unable to place the ball safely. Everybody wonders what Gandil would have done.

Chick Gandil pulled a pretty play- in the second inning. With two Red Sox runners on the bases, Everett Scott laid down an intended sacrifice, but Gandil came charging in, grabbed the hall and shot it to Foster in time to force out Lewis at Foster's corner.

Most of the girls thought that the Boston team had the prettiest suits, but then Mr. Milan and Mr. Gandii looked so sweet in their new striped coatumes.

The Washington team was very polite as a host, and let the Boston men play with the bats first without a word of dissension.

The first man wielded the bat gracefully, but a fielder caught one of his flies, and then, when he was put out of the game, every one in the grand stand seemed mad and thought it wasn't fair. The second man got mad and struck out, I heard some one say.
